PREFACE

THIS volume is intended to continue the list of British Diplomatic Representatives 1689-1789 published by the Society in 1932 and also to provide material for the list of Diplomats which is appearing under the auspices of the International Congress of the Historical Sciences. But the nineteenth century is so different in character from the eighteenth that a rather different method had to be applied to this aspect of it. The object has been to compile a list which included all who held the authority of the Crown to represent it during the period. The evidence has been derived exclusively from the original documents in the Foreign Office (and occasionally the Colonial Office) records in the Record Office. Not only have those series of documents been consulted which contained the records of appointments and the conveyance of Full Powers, but also the general correspondence of the representatives themselves, so that the exact dates of their entry and leaving of office might be ascertained, as well as their leaves of absence and, in certain cases, even their changes of residence. For this purpose something like 5,000 volumes of records have been consulted and it is hoped no important source of information has been omitted.

My own share of this work has been a small one, being confined to consultation and advice. Miss Malcolm Smith had already begun her survey of the period 1789-1815 and laid the foundations of the list for that period. By far the greater part of the work has been done by Mr. S. T. Bindoff, and by his intimate knowledge of the unpublished material in the Record Office, as well as by his careful and thorough survey of the more obvious sources, he has been able to produce an exceptionally complete list. The principles on which he worked are laid down in his Introduction which follows, and will I hope commend themselves to scholars and students for whose benefit the book has been compiled.

For reasons of space we have found it necessary to omit the biographical and bibliographical information of the earlier lists, but such information is much more easily obtained for this period.

We are indebted to the officials of the Record Office for great assistance in facilitating the consultation of so large a number of volumes in a comparatively short time, and especially to Mr. C. S. B. Buckland, whose great knowledge of the records was always at our disposal. We are grateful also to Dr. E. Jones Parry who supplied the details for France and Spain during the period 1841-6. We are indebted to the London School of Economics for a grant from its Rockefeller Research Fund and to the British Committee of the International Congress of the Historical Sciences for a small additional grant.

Great pains have been taken to make the list accurate and complete. But in so large a number of details some inaccuracies and omissions must occur and we shall be grateful for any corrections or additions which may at some future period be issued as corrigenda and addenda.

INTRODUCTION

THE period covered by the following list is from 1 January 1789 to 31 December 1852. In the case of missions—the term is here used to cover all degrees of diplomatic representation—which were in progress at either of these dates, the first or last years respectively are given at the head of their entries, but no details of them outside the limits of the period are included. On the same principle representatives whose credentials are dated before 31 December 1852 but who did not arrive at their posts before that date are excluded. Particulars of the previous course of missions in progress on 1 January 1789 will be found in British Diplomatic Representatives 1689-1789, edited by Dr. D. B. Horn, in the present series (to which the appropriate references are given in footnotes), while those in progress at the end of 1852 may be further followed in the Foreign Office List.

Within these limits the present list aims at including (1) all representatives, whatever the actual nature of their missions, who were furnished directly by the Crown<sup>1</sup> with credentials, letters of credence<sup>2</sup> or full powers for a major political object,<sup>3</sup> and who proceeded to their posts, irrespectively of whether they were recognised and received in that character by the governments to which they were accredited; and (2) all persons (whether or not specifically so accredited or presented) who were temporarily in charge of a mission in the absence of its chief.

The list therefore excludes, with one or two exceptions in special circumstances,<sup>1</sup> unaccredited agents, consuls-general and consuls, except in so far as any of these may be included under (1) and (2) above.

Every large-type entry in the list represents a single mission. The issue of new credentials consequent on the accession of a sovereign, on a change in the form of the foreign government or on a promotion in the diplomatic rank of the representative,<sup>2</sup> does not involve a separate entry, provided there was no break in residence other than on leave of absence. Every such entry should contain the following facts :

- (1) The name and designation of the representative for the period of the mission. The date of any change of name or of the assumption of any honour or title involving a change of designation are given in a footnote to the relevant entry.
- (2) The representative's diplomatic rank or title and the covering dates of his residence at his post. Cross references are given in those cases where a representative was simultaneously accredited to more than one government.
- (3) The dates of the original and any subsequent credentials, of instructions, full powers (if any), recall(s) (or revocation) and recredential(s), with references to all drafts and copies of these among the Foreign Office records.

The term "credential" is used to denote a royal letter addressed to the head of a foreign government accrediting its bearer, as distinct from a "letter of credence" addressed by the Foreign Secretary to the Foreign Minister of another country for the same purpose. This distinction in nomenclature is, of course, an arbitrary one, but it appears necessary in order to differentiate between what are two distinct kinds of diplomatic instrument. The "letter of credence" was always used, when necessary, to accredit a chargé d'affaires,<sup>3</sup> but only in exceptional circumstances to accredit the chief of a mission (e.g. Cowley at Frankfort in 1848<sup>4</sup>).

The singular number (credl., recall and recredl.) is employed wherever the representative had only a single instrument of its kind ; when for any reason he was furnished with two or more separate instruments the plural (credls., recalls and recredls.) is used. The practice of furnishing British representatives with separate credentials to the King and Queen of a foreign country which obtained at the period when this list begins was discontinued at some time during the first years of the nineteenth century and was only revived on the accession of William IV in 1830. Other examples of the issue of two or more credentials are found in Turkey to 1837 (to the Sultan and the Grand Vizir) and in the United Provinces of the Netherlands to 1795 (to the States-General and the Prince of Orange).

The instructions (instr.) referred to are the purely formal "General Instructions under the Sign Manual," as distinct from the political instructions contained in the first four or five despatches sent to the representative by the Foreign Secretary.

The full powers mentioned include those authorising the negotiation of political, military, commercial and slave trade treaties, but not, for example, of royal marriage treaties or postal and copyright conventions, nor of agreements negotiated by commissioners supplementary to a main treaty.

The few "revocations" included among the earlier entries under Persia and Turkey consist of formal royal letters addressed to the representatives themselves summoning them to return home. After 1789 they rapidly fell into disuse and were replaced by ordinary letters of recall addressed to the head of the foreign government concerned.

Many of the drafts and copies of the above instruments in the Foreign Office records are only dated by the month or year. Wherever an exact date exists it has been adopted, and where two drafts or copies of the same instrument bear different dates, the later of the two has been adopted in the list, while the earlier is mentioned in a footnote.

- (4) The dates of arrival, presentation of credential(s), absences under instructions or on leave (the dates given being those of actual departure and return), presentation of recall(s) (whether in person or by a successor) and departure ; and in the case of missions of which the conclusion of a treaty or convention formed a primary object, the date of its signature. An attempt has also been made to indicate significant changes of residence during missions, whether in order to accompany the sovereign or for any special object (e.g. visits to military headquarters or to neighbouring capitals), but the record of these cannot be regarded as exhaustive owing to the extensive research and the space necessary for a complete list.<sup>1</sup>

The entries in small type are those of ad interim representatives. These are of three kinds :

- (1) Ministers plenipotentiary ad interim. Dates of credential (with F.O. reference) and of its presentation are given.
- (2) Chargés d'affaires, i.e. persons formally presented to the Foreign Minister either by the chief of the mission or, in his absence, by letter of credence. Dates of letter of credence (with F.O. reference) and of its presentation are given, but not that of the personal presentation of a chargé d'affaires by the chief of the mission.
- (3) Persons "in charge of affairs," i.e. those who took charge of a mission without being either accredited or presented.

The dates given in all these entries (except, of course, those of the presentation of credentials, letters of credence and recalls), are those of the actual arrival and departure either of the head of the mission or of the ad interim representative.

Where secretaries of embassy or legation took charge in any of these capacities, the dates of their commissions (with F.O. reference) and the period of their service in these appointments are added, but in the case of consuls-general, consuls, attachés and secretaries (i.e. private secretaries to chiefs of missions), their rank or designation alone is given. The names of such subordinates are only included where they had charge of a mission. No attempt, of course, is made to compile a complete list of the personnel of the diplomatic service, but I estimate that seventy-five per cent of secretaries of embassy or legation are included in this connection.

<sup>1</sup> In cases where it has not been possible to determine an exact date, the terms "on or before" and "on or after" mean that the event referred to took place on the date mentioned or a day or two earlier or later, while the expressions "early," "mid" and "late" applied to a month should be understood to mean the periods between its first and tenth, eleventh and twentieth, and twenty-first and last days.

All entries are arranged in chronological order of first dates, i.e. a mission is followed by the ad interim representation during the chief's absences and from his departure until the arrival of his successor. Extraordinary and special missions follow the mission or ad interim representation which precedes it chronologically.

The list is entirely based on the Foreign Office records in the Public Record Office.<sup>1</sup> The great majority of the drafts and copies of credentials, full powers, commissions, etc., are found in various series in the classes Great Britain and General (F.O. 83), King's Letter Books (F.O. 90), and Miscellanea Series I and II (F.O. 95 and 96), although a few, especially for the period to 1815, are scattered among the General Correspondence. All the dates and facts relative to missions have been drawn from the General Correspondence, with occasional reference to the parallel series Embassy and Consular Archives to supplement it.<sup>2</sup>

S. T. B.

<sup>1</sup> With two exceptions, namely, Macartney's embassy to China in 1793, for which there is no correspondence in the Foreign Office records, and the facts of which have been drawn from the semi-official Account by Sir George Staunton, who accompanied Macartney; and a Court's mission to the Barbary States in 1813, the records of which are preserved among the Colonial Office records.

<sup>2</sup> Occasional exceptions to this are mentioned in footnotes. The details of Garter missions are chiefly drawn from the volume British Orders: Garter 1825-1869 (F.O. 83/943), which contains the records of these missions.
